the ground floor.

"Wasn't it fine!" she exclaimed. "Not one of the children misbehaved. Suppose it was a real fire—they couldn't have acted better."

"Well, Miss Evans," replied the other, "the third floor is in flames now."

Miss_Evans gave a little shriek and covered her face with a handkerchief so that none of her pupils would see her consternation. Other teachers on the third floor who marched their scholars by the burning closet were Miss Martha Murray, of 5A; Mr. D. Sam, of 5B and Mirray, of 5A; Mr. D. ### Carried a Cripple Out.

After the pupils had deserted the building and scores of firemen were piling up the stairways, it was learned that a crippled little boy, William Reynolds; who had been excused just

A dozen firemen sprang up the stairways. Little Reynolds was found fondly gazing on the smoke and flames shooting along the wals in the far end of the corridor. He was enjoying it immensely when a husky fireman threw him across his shoulder and ran down three flights with his burden. The damage caused by the fire was slight.
